Over two weeks ago I wrote you, asking that the mimeograph stencils I had sent on before me be returned. As yet they have not appeared. I would appreciate it very much if you could return them as soon as possible, or at least let me know whether your office received them or not. The stencils do not belong to me, and the [redacted] professor I borrowed them from wants them back. If your office did not receive them, please let me know so that I may collect on the postal insurance.

Yours very truly,
